Barb Barton is a singer-songwriter based in Lansing, Michigan. An endangered species biologist by day, troubadour by night, and spiritual seeker no matter the hour, Barton carries her influences on her shoulders as effortlessly as she carries her guitar. Barton first fell in love with music at five years old and hasn't put down the guitar since. Her self-titled 2018 album is her most eclectic and sophisticated release to date. Co-produced by Barton and Bill Bartilson, the record features a stunning cast of Michigan musicians including Doug Berch, Drew Howard, and Flint's gospel choir Cho'Zen led by Albert Strickland. Barton's influences span the full range of roots and Americana music--from bluegrass to gospel to the blues. Yet Barton has a style entirely her own, seamlessly flowing from inventive covers of classics to breathtaking originals. Take a listen and be transported to a soundscape that is simultaneously lush and full of grit, much like the land and waters of the place she calls home.
